

African Safaris

As for safari offerings for multigen travelers, it's increasingly all about exclusive-use camps and lodges. Singita – which has long had a wide range of specialized, customizable family-friendly fare – debuted its Singita Private offerings at the end of 2016 to help guests easily link stays at the recently renovated private villas at several of its properties. These included the four-suite Serengeti House at Singita Grumeti in Tanzania, which now features an eat-in kitchen, outdoor living room, and tented spa suite. Groups in these accommodations get their own driver-guides and vehicles for the length of their stay, giving them the freedom to fully tailor the game-viewing, wildlife-tracking experience.

↪ The folks at Micato Safaris have seen a rapid rise in requests for lodgings like these. Beyond Singita, they favor the updated two-bedroom tent at Sala's Camp in Kenya's Maasai Mara and, from the same owners, a relatively recently added wing – with two new rooms added last June – at Giraffe Manor, on the outskirts of Nairobi, that's ideal for families to take over. Kenya's 4-year-old OI Jogi Wildlife Conservancy, where Micato managing director Dennis Pinto stayed with three generations of his own family last summer, might well be the ultimate exclusive-use safari property, comprising 58,000 acres you and your crew will have all to yourself.

Hot-air ballooning in the African bush